

Today, memory is also very important for education because it allows people to understand the world. One way that memory allows people to understand the world is by teaching us about government. if were you remember how the government works then we can understand how to succeed in life. Another way is by teaching us about what the earth is made up and how the world works. with this knowledge they can understand how to use this to our advantage such as when creating vehicles we had to understand how electricity works. Memory also allows us to make connections from education and our own personal many memories in our lives. Furthermore, we use our memories to teach the future generations such as when your mom teaches you how to cook or do housework. Our education system and these books show how memory is important for people to function as a whole. ✓

In The Giver by Lois Lowry tells how Memory can influence someones perspective. Such as When Jonas saw his father release the newborn twin. He understood that the father was killing (from the memory of warfare) the child and therefore was upset and realized the heartless-ness of his community, but his father did not understand death (as Jonas did) therefore, he saw the release or killing the child as a normal task such as eating breakfast or emptying the rubbish bin. "Listen to me, Jonas. They can't help it. They know nothing"... "It's the way they live. It's the life that was created for them. It's the same life that you would have, if you had not been chosen as my successor" - The Giver (pg. 153). Also, after Jonas received the memory of the elephant being shot, he realized that people can make bad decisions which showed why his community choose to take away the memories. To add on, when he has the memory of a sunburn he realizes that there is more pain in the world than his community lets people experience. Another example is when Jonas ask his parents if they love (after he experiences the memory of Christmas) him and they respond with, "Then Father gave a little chuckle. "Jonas. You, of all people. Precision of language, please!" What do you mean? Jonas asked. Amusement was not at all what he had anticipated.

We need to revisit commas!

"Your father means that you used a very generalized word, so meaningless that it has become almost obsolete," his mother explained carefully.

Jonas stared at them. Meaningless? He had never before felt anything as meaningful as the memory." ✓

Well supported and well structured Alex!

In The Adoration of Jenna Fox Mary Pearson shows how memory can influence both an individual and people around them while in The Giver by Lois Lowry shows how memory can influence someones perspective. For example, when Jenna remembers the accident she knows that she was in critical condition and she would be beyond saving legally, but because her parents used an illegal amount of bio gel to she realizes how much her parents loved her. To add on, when she remembered the memory of her and her mother fighting over how much make up she was wearing she understood the relationship that her mother wanted her to have with her now like she had before the accident. Also, when Jenna remember that she loved hot chocolate you gave her joy and it influenced her by giving her hope that she would return to her own self. I know the way that memory influence Janice boxes perspective is when Jenna Remembered the dance recital and how she was always supposed to be perfect because her parents viewed her as this miracle child so when she really wanted to be herself. ✓
